

"The week in review"

A new hairdo is always nice!

They say time really flies, no pun intended. A full week has slipped away. I wonder if God ever says that "oh another week got away!"

I'm sure glad His timetable is right on the money, not lacking one second where His Name, His Glory, His Grace, and His precious Word have not been shared somewhere in the world. The best part according to His word is it does not return void.

This week I had a surprise visit from another part of Bolivia. Howard and Karla Moss introduced me to these dear people Emilio and Marlin Ychu. They work with the Guarayos in northern Bolivia.

They came out for a small break to visit their parents and we were able to meet them and hear about the ministry the Lord has them involved with.

Even though they want to reach the Guarayos in their mother language there also are a lot of Spanish speaking folks around. They are now equipped with a projector, laptop, speaker system and lots of Spanish programs. They're off and running and I bet they already have it hooked up for a Sunday night meeting. We ended the week here with a booming thunderstorm and now nice bright skies and warm weather.

What do you take for pain?

There are a number of things on the market but this one is especially good. Can you guess what it might be? Someone had a great idea for apartment doors - they look great, and they let in a lot of light, but they seem a bit invisible don't you think? The door is glass - it is there, can you see it? Your head finds it before your hands respond to opening it. We have four skid marks from four heads that have come in contact with the glass door so far. I put little note markers about nose high hoping to avoid any more embarrassment. It can be quite a pain going through the door, pun intended!

God bless you all,

Bruce from the other room
